WHY FAST AS A FLY

Because it explores an important theme— that success isn’t achieved instantly, and one must work hard for it.

A failing boxer takes an experimental elixir created by his scientist father and gains insect-like speed and power — but as his career soars, his body ages rapidly, and time becomes his fiercest opponent.

SYNOPSIS

Steve, a struggling London boxer, dreams of instant success, though his talent is limited. His mother, Linda, a former promoter from Saudi Arabia, pushes him forward, while his father, Muhammad, a scientist obsessed with flies and DNA-based medicine, works in his lab. One night, Steve brings his girlfriend to the lab and accidentally drinks a mysterious elixir. It transforms him: slow-motion perception, superhuman reflexes, and incredible strength. Steve rises rapidly, dominating the boxing world under Linda’s promotion, achieving Olympic glory and world champion status.

But the elixir accelerates aging. Linda wrestles between being a mother and a promoter, ultimately choosing to let Steve live a brilliant but short life, while Muhammad searches for a cure. Steve’s health collapses; his mother dies, and his father perishes in a lab fire.

Then Steve wakes—he never drank the elixir. It was a warning dream. Determined to succeed the right way, he trains, yet temptation lingers.

For Steve, the main character, all of this was a dream. When he wakes up, he decides to train on his own and achieve success through hard work. But in his thoughts, the idea remains that if he drinks the elixir, he will quickly become a champion.

That is why he ultimately decides to try it and comes to the laboratory by himself to drink the elixir.
