Growing up in the Los Angeles area I started playing piano at age eight and guitar at age eleven and was working professionally as a musician by age thirteen. As a teenager I played in local college big bands, studied classical guitar at California Institute of the Arts and was invited to study at UC Santa Barbara to develop my other musical love, composing.

As a young adult I studied piano, classical and studio guitar and composition at California State University Northridge where I received my Bachelor of Music Degree in composition. I also studied Javanese and Balinese Gamelan music at UCLA and Cal Arts. During this time I worked extensively as a session musician, musical director, composer, and producer.

Finally moving to the Seattle area I now spend my time composing production music, performing live and in the studio, and teaching guitar, piano and composition.
