STORY-HIGHLIGHTS

- "Nairobi Half Life" considered for best foreign language film Oscar
- Director spent time with real-life gangsters before starting movie
- "Are we really looking at why there is crime?" asks director David Gitonga

CNN -- A hard-hitting Kenyan movie about gang culture has become the country's first-ever film to be considered for an Oscar.

"Nairobi Half Life" has just been shown at Film Africa 2012, which is currently taking place in London -- having already made history as the most successful theatrical release for a local film in Kenya, according to its producers.

It's the debut film from Kenyan director David "Tosh" Gitonga, who says he wants to change views about crime in the country.
